Martin Giles

San Francisco Bureau Chief

MIT Technology Review

Martin Giles is the San Francisco Bureau Chief of the MIT Technology Review. Previously, Mr. Giles was a partner at Wing charged with developing the firm's intellectual capital. He worked with his colleagues to develop deep and actionable insights in core areas of interest to Wing and its portfolio companies.

Prior to Wing, Martin was a journalist with The Economist Newspaper and led the paper's coverage of Silicon Valley. During his 26-year career with The Economist, he also spent a decade as an operating executive running various global businesses and acquiring and managing startups.

Martin is a senior industry fellow at The University of California, Irvine's Center for Digital Transformation and is a member of the World Economic Forum's Council on The Future of Electronics. He is also a trustee of a charity that supports young people who want to become business journalists.

Martin holds a master's degree in Philosophy, Politics and Economics from Oxford University and an executive MBA from the University of Chicago's Booth Graduate School of Business.
